

About the Kellogg Institute

The Kellogg Institute for International Studies brings the best of interdisciplinary inquiry to bear on the research themes of democracy and human development, critical to contemporary societies around the world.

Global in scope, the Institute is composed of more than 100 faculty fellows from across Notre Dame in a wider community of students and visiting fellows from around the world. Their different perspectives, disciplines, and methodological approaches create a fertile environment for innovative research that addresses important current issues and questions.

For more than three decades, visiting fellows have energized the Kellogg community with fresh approaches to democratization, international development, and area studies, remaining a vital part of the Kellogg community after they return home.

About the University of Notre Dame

One of the world's leading Catholic universities, the University of Notre Dame is recognized for excellence in research, scholarship, and education. Ranked among the top 25 universities in the US, Notre Dame has more than 12,000 graduate and undergraduate students and more than 1,000 faculty members.

Notre Dame's beautiful campus in South Bend, Indiana is less than 100 miles from Chicago. Campus facilities include a world-class library, excellent athletic facilities, and a renowned performing arts center.

KELLOGG INSTITUTE FOR INTERNATIONAL STUDIES

exploring DEMOCRACY and HUMAN DEVELOPMENT

Visiting Fellowships

kellogg.nd.edu

Move a research project forward...

...in an intellectually stimulating environment, share findings in our scholarly community, develop connections, and engender dialogue between high-level scholarship and public policy.

At the Kellogg Institute for International Studies, we offer visiting fellowships to promote interdisciplinary research in a supportive community of scholars. Join us to engage in exploring core Kellogg research themes of democracy and human development, two of the world's greatest challenges.

"...the Kellogg Institute provides a truly ideal academic and collegial environment to think and write about the important questions confronting our world..."

— Evelyne Huber
University of North Carolina

Our widely respected residential program offers time to pursue scholarly inquiry, advance personal research, and collaborate with top scholars and practitioners from across the US and around the globe. Fellows also have the opportunity to present research at a work-in-progress session or public lecture, participate in campus conferences and workshops, and teach or mentor outstanding students.

Visiting fellows are vital members of our vibrant intellectual community, interacting with faculty, graduate students, and leading academics and experts from around the globe through the Institute's seminars and lectures, international conferences, and discussions of world affairs both formal and informal.

Seeking Scholars and Practitioners of Democratization and Human Development

We invite applications from scholars and practitioners who conduct international research on democracy and/or human development, and especially the linkages between the two:

- Promising junior and midcareer scholars (typically postdocs and assistant or associate professors)
- Distinguished senior scholars with an established record of scholarly excellence
- Accomplished policymakers and other practitioners whose knowledge and experience can link policy and scholarship

Awards and Resources

Most fellowships are academic-year or semester-long in length, with two-year postdoctoral fellowships also available. Awards include a stipend, travel expenses, medical insurance benefits, and subsidized, furnished on-campus housing.

Kellogg Institute facilities include comfortable office space, on-site information technology support, access to extensive electronic and library resources, and use of campus facilities.

Eligibility

Most successful applicants will hold a PhD or equivalent degree in a social science discipline or in history.

- We welcome applications from eminent scholars and practitioners who do not hold a PhD.
- Advanced ABD graduate students may apply but awards are contingent on PhD completion before the fellowship begins.

To Apply

The majority of Kellogg visiting fellowships are awarded through the program's annual competition. The Institute may consider applications from distinguished senior scholars and practitioners on a rolling basis outside the competition.

For information on the fellowship application process:

kellogg.nd.edu/vfellowships

Application deadline: October 1

Questions? Please contact:

Denise Wright, Program Coordinator

574-631-8523 or dwright1@nd.edu