

Ernie Bartell is the Voice of Experience at the Kellogg Institute. He is its institutional memory incarnate. He was the indispensable man, present at the creation of Kellogg. He is too modest to claim to be its creator, but he persuaded Guillermo O'Donnell and Alejandro Foxley to come to Indiana when they had more obvious options, and that was the pivotal moment. All of Kellogg's success in attracting great minds, generating seminal ideas, and putting Notre Dame on the map in Latin America flowed from that moment. Everyone associated with the Kellogg Institute owes him a big debt.

Michael Coppedge
Professor, Department of Political Science
Faculty Fellow, Kellogg Institute of International Studies
Co-Principal Investigator, V-Dem