

I am immensely grateful to Fr. Robert Pelton for his editorial work. Bringing together the results of serious conferences on the life and thought of Oscar Romero, Archbishop of San Salvador, has allowed scholars and people of faith in general to enter the vast and complex world of Romero's witness in his country at the start of the civil war. Fr. Pelton's understanding of the need to connect the renewal of the Catholic Church in the United States to the transformation of the Church in Latin America continues to produce fruitful scholarly collaboration and new ways of looking at the relationship between the two regions in a globalized environment. I am happy to have benefitted from his good work.

Sincerely,

Aurora Camacho de Schmidt