I have very fond memories of Bob Pelton, both in Rome, where I first met him, and at Notre Dame, where he invited me to give a Romero lecture on March 20, 2001. This was a huge honour for me – both to be associated with Notre Dame and to be associated with our great Saint of the Americas, Oscar Romero. As I write this I have got out the poster for my lecture once again – now rather fragile - and looked at it with pride. I will never forget the warmth of the visit or the warmth of Bob himself, who was such a supportive companion on my visit. I have a high regard for what he has achieved, on behalf of our beloved continent.
